This week at St Paul's:

On Tuesday students from the Royal College of Music are recording in the church while a film company uses the hall.

On Wednesday morning the Knightsbridge School holds its Harvest Service.

On Thursday morning there will be a Memorial Service for the late Earl of Eglinton and Winton

On Saturday we hold our second Dementia-friendly concert in partnership with Songhaven.

Going, going, gone!

It is, apparently, the nation's favourite painting, trumping the Hay Wain by Constable, The Singing Butler by Vettriano and even the Fighting Temeraire by Turner. Banksy's 'Girl With Balloon' first appeared in Shoreditch in 2002 as a piece of freely-accessible street art by Britain's most-illusive and most-loved graffiti artist. It has appeared in various versions since. In 2012, one version painted by the artist on cardboard sold for more than £73,000. On Friday of this week a 2006 version by Banksy, spray paint and acrylic on canvas, mounted on a board and framed, sold for over £1 million at Sotheby's in London.

Filled with acquisitive materialistic envy? Wish you'd spotted him early? Just think of the return on investment if you had! Judgemental about a ludicrous art market that rewards the rich and takes art out of the hands of the ordinary woman or man? Dismayed that he has gone 'commercial'? Notice how you feel and what you think as you read the first paragraph. And then read on.

Moments after the hammer fell on Friday evening, bidders in the auction room heard a strange whirring sound. As they watched, the image – a still hanging on the wall – was shredded by a device installed in the frame, falling out off the frame beneath as mangled strips! And simultaneously a tweet from the artist announced to the world, "Going, going, gone..." It had all been part of Banksy's plan. The last item. A record sale. And with it an amazing coup de theatre, and a buyer apparently deprived.

And note how you feel and what you are thinking as you read that second part of the story. Amused? Smug? Glad that greed hasn't been rewarded? Sorry for the purchaser? Quietly pleased?

There is, of course, no one right or wrong way to think or feel. But noticing how we feel and what we think when faced with daily events can be a good way of checking our spiritual health. Am I judgmental? Am I compassionate? Am I cynical? And since I am possibly all three (and more) at different times, in what proportion and with what immediacy do I fall into particular ways of thinking?

As an exercise in Christian spiritual recalibration it is something we should all do regularly. We can be so caught up in simply 'behaving' that we lose acuity in our self-awareness and often the first people to notice that we have slipped into, say, fashionable cynicism or judgmentalism are those around us and not ourselves. And they may be too polite to say anything!

This daily examination of self is neither a narcissistic indulgence nor an idle piece of introspection; rather it is an essential tool in healthy lives (with their call to be 'as Christ' to those around us). What does it mean to be 'as Christ'? Well, that is the other task in our daily call to discipleship: the Scriptures and our tradition have much to say about greed, avarice, acquisitiveness, about judgementalism and compassion, and about how proper management of these is essential not only to individual spiritual well-being but to healthy relating in community. Pondering this wisdom and internalising it is our lifetime's task. When we notice (a) how we are, and (b) have a strong-enough sense of how we want to be, we are left with the task (c) of synthesis and striving (put simply, making it real) and opening ourselves to the grace that makes that possible.

Critical incident reflection (e.g. when we hear something on the News or have an experience in life that provokes a response in us) could and should be part of our daily spiritual lives. Is it? If you'd like to talk about how to be more intentional about your spiritual journey, why not check in with one of the clergy – either one to one, or get a group together?

Oh, and by the way, while Sotheby's were struggling to work out whether the buyer was still contractually bound to pay for the now-destroyed work of art, others in the art world were expressing the view that even though now shredded, the painting's value had more or less immediately doubled! What say / feel / think you about that?!

Fr Alan Gyle

John King RIP

A solemn funeral mass of requiem will be sung in church on Wednesday 17th October at noon. All regular members of the congregation are welcome.
