THANK YOU!

Many thanks to Caroline Docker and her team for putting on a hugely enjoyable Garden Party on Thursday evening at which over £6,000 was raised for our work in the community! Especial thanks to The Hari Hotel for their generous sponsorship of the drinks, to Patricia Dopheide and her team for the catering, and to all who donated prizes.

SEEN IN CONTEXT

From now till mid October it is possible to see, exhibited in London, some of Fra Angelico's restored frescoes from the 15th Century Dominican San Marco Convent in Florence. But with a twist!

The exhibition Fra Angelico/Opus Operantis is a series of photographs by Robert Polidori of the works 'in context': photographed in the rooms for which and in which they were painted. As the exhibition catalogue says: Polidori's photographs 'excavate' the psychological structure of the rooms, exploring a connection between the calm interior spaces of the monk's cells and the the spiritual charge of Fra Angelico's striking masterworks depicting the life of Christ, which were designed to stimulate meditation and prayer.

Robert Polidori is an acclaimed photographer of human habitats, interior spaces and urban environments. Creating highly detailed, large-format colour photographs of places marked by the imprint of lives past and present, Polidori's images reflect on notions of memory and history embedded within architecture. He began his career in avant-garde film assisting Jonas Mekas at the Anthology Film Archives in New York, an experience that critically shaped his approach to photography, based on ideas of temporality and stillness. While living in Paris in the early 1980s, he began documenting the restoration of Versailles, and has continued over a 30-year period to photograph the ongoing changes to its interior. He has gone on to photograph the crumbling majesty of mansions in Havana, Cuba; the deserted ruins of the 1986 Chernobyl nuclear disaster in Pripyat and Chernobyl; and in 2005, travelled to New Orleans to record the abandoned homes and devastation caused by Hurricane Katrina.

Created with long exposures and using natural light, Polidori's photographs present what he has described as an idealized view of time and place as it exists in the mind's eye, delivering images that invoke stillness and contemplation through their detailed command of colour, texture, light and shade.

Apart from the thrill of fine photography and fascinating frescoes seen anew, what might this exhibition prompt us to reflect on? Throughout his career of four decades, Polidori has returned to the subject of the room as a container of memory or metaphor for inner emotional states. Polidori's rooms are both a poetic encounter with the history of interior spaces, and a portrait of contemporary society. Perhaps, encouraged by much modern photography in books or on the internet, we have come to think of scenes from the life of Christ (such as Fra Angelico's) 'in abstraction' – as timeless themes belonging to a narrative detached from real life. But these images bring them 'home' to a real context: so, 'the betrayal and arrest of Jesus' (above) painted in the context of a religious community – the temptation to the kiss of betrayal a daily experience for those 'on the Christian way;' similarly the famous image of 'the mocking of Christ,' a temptation for a 15th century Dominican and for a 21st Century Londoner. These images prompt us to consider narrative in context – and not only in Florentine context, but in our own.

LEARNING AT THE CATHEDRAL

There is an excellent programme of workshops and talks exploring the Christian faith at St Paul's Cathedral. Upcoming events include:

The Eucharist in Six Objects

Saturday 21st September, 2pm-4:30pm

Canon James Milne (Precentor) will explore the meaning of the Eucharist through six objects – ranging from the everyday to precious works of art - recognizing that partaking in the Eucharist is not merely a cerebral experience but a physical encounter in which all our senses are engaged. Tickets: £15, available on the Cathedral's website.

Where Love Is The Way: The Jesus Movement Now

Thursday 3rd October at 6:30pm

Bishop Michael Curry (Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church in the USA) will explore how Christians can make a world of integrity, justice and compassion, where every single person has dignity and freedom. Free tickets available on the Cathedral's website.
