WHEN LIFE GIVES YOU LEMONS

The phrase 'when life gives you lemons, make lemonade' was coined by the Christian anarchist writer Elbert Hubbard in 1915. He wrote it in an obituary for the so-called 'King of Jesters', Marshall Pinckney Wilder, a well-known dwarf actor who never allowed his diminutive stature to stand in the way of his ambition and success. His drive, positivity and optimism were legendary. Dale Carnegie borrowed the phrase for his famous book on motivation, How to Stop Worrying and Start Living.

Life in mid-March 2020 is a bit lemony, isn't it, soured by an unexpected turn of events. We are embattled, already in the grip of a virulent global pandemic, and many of us feel anxious. Although life is continuing relatively normally for the time being in London at least (mindless panic buying apart!), it seems likely that within a short time our ability to move about freely, to travel and to gather together may necessarily be restricted for the sake of disease control. Many are already working from home and all of us are beginning to behave in new ways keeping our distance from one another in lives punctuated by vigorous hand-washing.

It is easy, especially when anxious, to drift into unimaginative self-absorption – focused only on self and self-preservation. Me, myself, I. Anxiety can be isolating and we can drift into forgetting our neighbour. We can also fall into a sense of hopelessness about the potential of such a period as this. One of the most depressing features of much of the advice being given at the moment is that it is about keeping ourselves safe. Nothing wrong with that, of course – except that it doesn't go far enough. The Christian calling is, fundamentally and non-negotiably, a call into relationship with God and neighbour. It is not about 'me'. It is about 'us'.

If life is giving us lemons... What if, instead of allowing ourselves to become psychological prisoners of these tricky times, focussed on what we can't do, we were to see these days as days filled with opportunity. There may be a whole lot we can't do – but there is lots we might suddenly be able to do which the busyness of life usually impedes: reading, writing, painting, making music or listening to it, drawing, praying, studying, being still. And what if, instead of lapsing into self-absorption, we were to use these days to strengthen our bonds of connection with others? Just because we can't necessarily visit one another, we can find other ways of connecting, perhaps focusing on being more attentive than we usually manage to be, aware that they too may be anxious: writing, phoning, using social media creatively – and praying for one another. Who do you keep meaning to catch up with? Why not do it?

There is nothing good about a pandemic: but that is not to say that good things cannot happen in these days... if we let them.

BISHOP'S LENT APPEAL 2020 – Wheels for Climate Change Emergencies

Please will you make a donation to the Bishop's Lent Appeal, this year to raise funds to buy trucks for our link diocese in Mozambique so that supplies – water, charcoal, building materials etc – can be delivered by the local Bishop as he responds in person to an emergency (such as the flooding in Mozambique caused by Cyclone Idai in March last year). Cheques or cash donations may be given direct to the parish office, may be made online at spkb.org, or may be clearly marked and placed in the collection plate at one of the services.
